

PURIFYING THE SERVICE.

Secretary Teller's Crusade Against Swindling Pension Claim Agents.

His Letter to the Attorney General—Some Facts, Figures, and Opinions.

Secretary Teller has made the following reply to the communication of Attorney General Brewster in regard to the appointment of experts from the pension bureau to assist the district attorney in the preparation of cases against pension attorneys charged with illegal operations:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, WASHINGTON, Nov. 9, 1893.—Hon. BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER, Attorney General, U. S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, I am in receipt of your communication of the seventh instant concerning the appointment by the commissioner of pensioners of persons to aid the United States district attorney in the investigation of all claims for pensions and bounties, in connection with charges made against pension attorneys, and to examine such cases as the district attorney may desire to present to the grand jury. You say I am to be asked to make an appointment cannot be made to examine cases where the officers charged are not officers against the United States, but are pensioners. I am in receipt of your letter to you of the twenty-third ultimo, in which you state that the pension agents make application to the pension office, and that you know that the claims they present are fraudulent.

I have, for the second time, carefully examined the letter of the district attorney of the twenty-third ultimo, of which you speak, and failed to find that he in that letter suggested even a disposition to prosecute parties guilty of attempting to defraud the government of the United States. The pension office is a pension office, and not an office to examine cases where the officers charged are not officers against the United States. The pension office is a pension office, and not an office to examine cases where the officers charged are not officers against the United States. The pension office is a pension office, and not an office to examine cases where the officers charged are not officers against the United States.

its groans and frightening them by its mysterious antics, pulled all the bedclothes off and them, piled them in a heap, sat upon them, and made noises more hideous than those of the other. The boys again complained, and were severely reprimanded; some of the most positive and terrified being even threatened with expulsion. On the third night, as before, just as the last knell of midnight sounded hollow and dismal, the specter reappeared. It was changed—no longer white, but black from head to foot, bearing in its hand a wand, which emitted a dim, ghastly light. The vision was again striped and lost, instead of sitting on the bedclothes, the apparition began to labor them most unmercifully with the stick, driving them round and round the room, shrieking and yelling in wild fright. In vain they attempted to open the door. Some one had locked it and the key had disappeared. The master heard the noise, broke into the room, saw the marks of blows, found the key on the floor inside the doorway, and promised to investigate the mystery. The morning it was proposed to abandon the dormitory and shut it up, for no clue to the mystery had been discovered. In the midst of the excitement Hugo arrived, muddy and tired with traveling. He heard the story and volunteered to sleep in the room, did so, and restored its reputation. Of course, you know what follows. He was the ghost; the tale of his mother's illness and his traveling was a false one, and the phosphoric rod and the key were in the room in the secret room, which he had stored with provisions and books for his retreat during the day.
